A Western View. We gave yesterday a New York view of the new international bimetallic conferce. We quote a western view from Mr. HALSTEAD as follows: * European commercial nations are experiencing a great deal of difficulty in regard to this silver question: more, in fact, than the United States. It must, therefore, be settled by the international conference which must agre upon the respective values of gold and silver and adapt their coinage to that basis of value so as to preserve the comparative value of gold and silver. If the international conference can-not bring this about it will not be brought about at all, and there will be a contest, the result of which would be financial disaster. We do not apprehend any such difficulty. The United States now has its policy, which is working well, and it remains for the Euroies to come to a sensible view of the uation. It is manifest that there is not sufficient gold in the world to form a basis of cur-pency. It was not so years ago, but it is so now. because of the great increase in the commerce of the world and in the financial affairs of na-tions. England cannot of itself dictate to the rest of the world, nor can the United States, nor can any country. Therefore, the nations must come together and agree upon a policy that will not debase the currency or the value of the del-lar, while it will take care of a system of circulation that will preserve and keep at the front both gold and silver." The Commercial-Gazette is clearly right, though it is a Republican journal and opposed to the free coinage of silver, when i mays there is not sufficient gold in the world to form a basis of currency. If gold monometallism can be successful under such circumstances, then a currency based upon ideal gold-gold which does not exist at allwould be as good as a currency based upon the yellow precious metal itself. This is the point to which all argument should be addressed-namely, that silver has not decreased in value as compared with wheat, flour, cotton, or tobacco or other com-modities, but that gold has increased in value when thus compared.

An international conference must prove to be wise. "Many men of many minds." It will do some of the old-fogy financiers of Europe good to be told to their faces by a daring American that their antiquated notions have been proved by the experience of the United States to signify nothing except the ignorance of their advocates. It will do some of the daring Americans good to be told that the financiers of Europe have studied financial problems diligently, but have not yet been convinced that "the home of the setting sun" is the only country in the world where financial problems can be

The Great Crime.

FEED. DOUGLASS made a speech at Chicago some days ago in which he intimated that if the southern lynchings were not speedily discontinued the southern negroes would become chemists and would learn to make bombs and use them.

Here we have another plaint about the lynchings, but no word of condemnation of the crime which is the occasion of them. Stop the crime and the lynchings will cease-not before. This is the true view. This is the doc trine that Dovolass and all the people who sympathize with him and his race should

So far as Virginia is concerned nearly all of the lynchings that occur are the result of this one specially heinous crime. We judge that the same is true in all other southern States. Therefore the right course to pursue to check lynchings is to teach the negroes to beware how they offend in this respect.

The Trolley-Again.

The Baltimore Sun says that in spite of the great popular opposition, the Philadel-phis Traction Company has succeeded in inducing the City Council to pass another ordinance perfecting previous legislation for the introduction of the trolley system of overhead wires.

has fallen upon him.

It is a shock to usall. For the moment at east a hush must fall upon the clang of factions, and the proceedings of the State Democratic Convention which is to meet here this week will be tempered by the presence of this bereavement.

Mr. Barnous had reached the age of 72 years. His hold upon the public was not gained in a day or a year, but was the growth of a lifetime. He was of distinguished lineage, was educated at the University of Virginia, and was trained for the law and followed it for several years. In 1347 he was elected to the House of Delegates. Subsequently for a long period he was a railroad president. In 1880 it happened that the convention for his congressional district was so equally divided between ertain prominent aspirants for the nomination that it became essential to the welfare of the party to introduce a new name. This was done. JOHN S. BARBOUR Was the man, and be was nominated and elected.

Thus after many years he returned to olitical life. He was known as a calm, hrewd, far-seeing man, and though, he had none of the gifts of the orator and no great degree of personal magnetism he nade a representative who was valuable to his constituents and who ranked high SUDDEN DEATH OF SENATOR JOHN S. n the national House and in the councils of his party. His judgment was regarded as excellent and he was looked upon as pe-culiarly gifted in diagnosing difficult polit-

In 1879, and again in 1883, the Readjusters and Republicans under General Ma-HONE overwhelmed the Democratic party of this State with defeat. The situation pecame very distressing, and many feared that it was hopeless. The people groaned mightily under the rule of Mr. Manone, OUR BATTLE-FIELDS - Congressman Cumbut as our party had lost many of its trusty voters by the separation from it of the Readjusters it was a matter of serious doubt if it could enter the contest of 1886 with any prospect of success. The prayer of the people was for a leader who would be a match for MAHONE in energy, boldness, and ability. Among other names that of Mr. Barroug was mention ed for the chairuanship of the State Committee, and when the convention met at Lynchburg he was overwhelmed with entreaties to accept the position.

He was wanted to reform our shattered olumns; to transform despair into hope, and to make victory take the place where defeat reigned. The Lynchburg convention accepted the RIDDLEBERGES debt bill; held out a welcoming hand to all Democratic Readjusters and got many of them to return to the party, and, with Mr. BARBOUR as chairman of the State Committee, ought that memorable campaign of 1883. In that year, as in 1869 (when the people uprose in their might and voted down the bnoxious features of the Underwood Constitution and reorganized the State government), every Virginian of Democratic faith put his shoulder to the wheel. In those days here in Richmond, and in many other places, voters ranged themselves at the polling-places four or five hours before sunrise in their eagerness to do their duty. With alternating hope and fear, amid much excitement, and not without bloodshed, the campaign was brought to a close and the Democrats regained possession of both branches of the General Assembly. Later on Mr. BARBOUR was elected to the United States Senate. With the exception of one year, when he was in Europe, he remained at the head of the State Commit-ELLYSON. Mr. BARBOUR went from the State Committee to the National Democratic Committee, where also his ability and services were highly valued.

Mr. BARBOUR was tall, straight, and spare. His figure as well as his face was commanding, while his gold spectacles (which near-sightedness had compelled him to wear for many years) and thoughtful countenance gave him rather the appearance of a college professor than of political leader. While he appeared to little advantage as a public speaker his letters and addresses were marked by vigorous thought and felicitous expression, and he had rare skill in forming correct estimates

Virginia cannot afford to forget Mr. Barbour. His services to her were important, his fidelity was beyond question, and he richly deserved every honor our people ever bestowed upon him. Let it be remembered, too, that he was steadfast in his friendships and strong in his political faith; that he was pure in public and private lite, and that he died at his post of Harrison's Hope.

It is stated on the authority of one of his personal friends that the President is personally indifferent to the outcome of the national con-vention. He feels that a second term can bring him no greater honors, and while he would be gratified by the appreciative tribute of a re-nomination he regards as paramount to his personal pleasure at the party's commendation the necessity of having a Republican President in-augurated on the 4th of next March.—Washing-

These "personal friends" are talking Mr. Harrison dearly wishes re-election, and he will be a soured man if he does not get the nomination of his party.

If he is so "indifferent" why doesn't he step out of the way and let Mr. BLAINE have the job? The Plumed Knight covets it, but dares not attempt to reach out for it, as his health on the one hand and his sense of loyalty to Mr. Harrison on the other restrain him.

Harrison is one of those office-holders who are "indifferent." but who neverthe-less hold on all the same, and that, too, with a tenacity which is very discouraging to other aspirants.

All the probabilities point to the re-nomination of Mr. Harrison, but he need not count too surely upon re-election, because while the Democrats are having a very lively family row now, especially in New York and in the southern States, for all that he knows they may emerge from the Chicago convention with nominees who can unify the party in all sections of the Union and who can wring victory from the self-confident and too-presumptuous

The International Conference.

If the efforts of the "silver lunatics" shall result in inducing England, France, Italy, and Germany to agree upon bimetallism, and to provide a currency for all the world, those much-despised people will have rendered a service of incalculable value to all mankind. They will have established a universal currency; for once the nations named agree upon bimetallism all the rest of the consequences so long hoped for by the silverites will follow naturally.

That legislation can influence the price

That legislation can influence the price of gold is conceded in the following paragraph in our issue of Thurday. It is a cablegram from London. We quote it:

"The acceptance by England of the invitation of the United States to take part in an international conference on the silver question with it is believed here, carry the other invited nations with it and assure the success of the movement. All the prominent nations of Europe have been invited to take part in the conference, and it is understood that lavorable responses have been received, not only from England, but from Italy and Austria-Hungary as well. The acceptance by Italy is considered as specially important because of its prominence in the Latin Union."

"To assure the success of the movement." is to substitute himstelliem for lliam and to take the pre mary steps towards providing for a univer-sal currency. All these results are to be names knew is to-day as cold and inani-nate as if it had been chiselled out of nameble.

To Mr. Barrour there came yesterday a harp transition from searning health to otions illness; from illness to death, and ow he who was a sagacious leader and a roice was heard throughout the Old Doninion in a letter discussing a matter of noment, and now an everlasting silence from London in Friday's DISPATCH concedes this to be the truth. We quote: Loxpox, May 12.—The decision of the government to join the currency conference has cause a demand for rupee paper, which closed to-day silver securities were also bought.

"Rupee paper" was thus favorably affected by the mere decision of the gov-ernment to send delegates to the international bimetathic congress. There is food for reflection in these facts. "Other silver securities" than rupes paper partie pated in the temporary favorable influence which was exercised by the govern ment's decision over the metal which hun dreds of millions of British' subjects em ploy to the exclusion of gold.

We feel greatly encouraged by the deci-sion of the British Government. It will leave the Chicago convention free to drop for this year the silver question, which however, must not be finally abandone until the people's wishes in regard to it shall have been carried out.

Postal Reforms. When we discuss now the question of extending the free delivery of mail matter, not only to all the towns but to some of the country districts, we must not forget that electric street-railroads have already converted the problem of free delivery into a very different shape from that which it bore when it was first proposed, and will change it in many more fea tures ere it goes into operation. said heretofore that these roads have altered the conditions of city life. The general result of the free use of electric-cars must be an abolition of the custom of building fine houses, or any other kind of houses, on small lots, Corner lots will not need hereafter to be made to front on two streets, nor people be compelled to herd together in tenement houses either on the corners of the streets or elsewhere. Especially will these changes affect towns and cities hereafter to be founded and built up. The connection between electric roads and the extension of mail tacilities is due to the fact that these roads have already done so much in this direction and will do infinitely more in the fa-

It must be recollected that the city merchants and other city people will derive as much benefit from the free delivery of mail matter in the country towns as will the inhabitants of those towns. It is, therefore, not a scheme for city people to characterize as extravagant or wasteful because it will not pay from the start as the present system of free delivery has paid.

The Postmaster-General has already tested the proposition to extend free de livery to a number of small towns, and it cating of our people-nobody can foretell to what extent.

To the Post-Office Department will b added ere long a national telegraph system which will supplement the free delivery of mail matter. The letter-carriers in the of communicating with one another.

England has tried successfully the experiment of rural free delivery, but we do every one of them. not know how general in the country districts England's free-delivery system is. Mr. TROLLOPE, in his autobiography, speaks of it as if it had made itself successful years ago.

Whilst speaking of postal reforms we whilst speaking of postar feroms we tee until 1889, when he retired and was succeeded by Mr. Gosbon, and he by Mr. position to allow anybody who to do so to paste a printed slip on a postalcard and send it free through the mails. though that proposition found little favor at the hands of the convention of postmasters recently held in Washington. It is contended that one-cent stamped envelopes may be used in place of postalvelopes may be used to send printed paragraphs, such as cards to send printed paragraphs, such as marriage and death notices; but this conmarriage and death notices; but this consideration, seeing that a single stamped envelope costs two cents-double the price of a postal card. Besides, their use suggests to the recipient that, as a paid envelope was used, a letter might have been written; and this annoyance is exactly what the public desire to get rid of. They wish to send short nessages to their friends without writing formal letters to them. Submit this proposition to the voters, and it would be carried almost unanimously.

There are other proposed postal reforms. which we shall consider and discuss in due time.

Europe and Morocco. The impression seems to obtain abroad that with the death of the present Sultan of Morocco that country will become a bone over which most of the nations of Europe may be called upon to contend. MULEY HASSAN, who is said to be suffering from an incurable disease which threatens a speedy termination of his mortal career, owes his position as absolute sovereign to the jealousy existing among European powers—notably France, Spain, Italy, and Great Britain. Each desires possession of Morocco, but any three would under present conditions be ready to combine diplomatically against the fourth in keeping the fourth from obtaining an adva tage there, and it is not improbable could bring Austria and Germany to their support. This and this alone enables the Sulan to make his domain about the most nisgoverned Mohammedan country on the face of the globe. The reason assigned for the jealousy referred to is that owing to steam navigation Morocco has become a key to the Mediterranean. No longer, as in the days of sailingressels, are ships entering that great highway of commerce compelled by the winds and currents to pass within range of the guns of Gibraltar. Tangier, it is con-tended, which is situated at a point where Spain and Africa approach each other closest, is capable of being so fortified by the power holding it as to render the possession by that power of Gibraltar a secondary consideration. It commands, it is claimed, the western access to and egress from the Mediterranean.

The death-watch on Muley Hassan and the game that it seems certain will follow his demise will be interesting, but in the light of the fate of most of the "keys" to the Mediterranean there seems to be no question as to which power will hold the oign of advantage in the end. Great Britain is the mistress of too many of these keys to allow the lock to become worthless owing to the lack of one more. Calling the Roll of States. It is the custom in Democratic national conventions, when nominations are called for, to call the roll of the States in alphabotical order. Thus Alabama always has the opportunity to precede all the other States in necessiting her fight choices for President.

whose names have previously been called. We think it is the custom for each State having a favorite son to present his to the convention. If this be so Mr. Hill will be presented by New York. This, however, will not prevent Mr. CLEVELAND'S name from being presented by some other State. New York is the twenty-seventh

State upon the roll.

The national convention is only a few weeks ahead of us. The delegates, however, will have time for deliberation. The tuture nobody can read.

At the request of a number of readers we republish the subjoined extract from Senator Bannoun's recent letter to show that it is not true, as has been intimated, that he gave up the fight for a Democratic President this year. The first clause read in connection with the second shows that he meant only to sound a note of warning in the interest of unity in the party; It is exceedingly doubtful whether the Der It is exceedingly doubtful whether the Demo-cratic party can elect any candidate who may be nominated at its national convention for the presidency.
